National Certification Council

In 2015 AHRI introduced a program that facilitates formal certification for HR professionals in Australia. The program involves a robust validation of the knowledge, skills and behaviours of HR practitioners in addition to the confirmation of their commitment to continuous professional development (CPD).

A key outcome of the role and deliverables of the National Certification Council (NCC), is AHRI's ability to more actively promote the benefits of HR to the wider business community.

The standards for certification are underpinned by AHRI's Model of Excellence (MoE) which draws from current research and industry benchmarks. The AHRI Practising Certification program (APC) has been developed to support the formal certification process and is aligned to this model.

Pathway 1: AHRI Practising Certification Program

The APC includes a combination of knowledge and skills development and assessment strategies across a 4-unit postgraduate level program. Upon completion, participants will have formal validation and recognition via the post-nominal CPHR or FCPHR. The post-nominal will communicate the fact that they have been independently assessed as having attained the essential HR knowledge (what they know) and skills (what they do) required to deliver excellence in their professional practice.

The program includes the capacity for 'skills recognition' across the 3 knowledge units and may be gained through study, recognition of prior learning (RPL) or Cross-Credit from AHRI accredited university programs, but the mandatory 4th capstone unit must be completed and formally assessed and cannot be gained through RPL.

Pathway 2: Senior Leaders Pathway

For our senior HR leaders, pathway to Certification is provided via a case-study and interview process, that is overseen by a sub-committee of the NCC or nominated certified practitioner in advance of being presented to the NCC. Note, the sub-committee may include up to 2 members of the NCC in addition to the AHRI General Manager, HR Standards & Practice. Once the candidate is approved, they will be awarded with CPHR or FCPHR

Pathway 3: Mutual Partnership Agreements

Certified members from other HR industry certification bodies will be awarded CPHR or FCPHR in accordance with the terms and conditions agreed in the relevant mutual partnership agreement, under the authority of the NCC.

Pathway 4: Academic Pathway

For our academics, their pathway to certification is provided a portfolio and interview process, that is overseen by a sub-committee of the NCC or nominated certified academic in advance of being present to the NCC. Note, the subcommittee may include up to 2 members of the NCC in addition to the AHRI General Manager, HR Standard & Practice. Once the candidate is approved, they will be awarded with CAHR or FCAHR

The NCC oversees the HR standards, administration and decision making that result in the credentialing of eligible candidates seeking HR certification.

The NCC, delegated by the Board is the awarding body of the professional certification post-nominal: CPHR, CAHR and/or FCPHR and FCAHR. The NCC is responsible for overseeing the mechanisms available to members with respect to member application processes for certification and continuous professional development (CPD) audits, including management of appeals.

The NCC is responsible for the oversight of the National Accreditation Committee which has responsibility for the accreditation standards for university programs underpinned by AHRI's HR Model of Excellence. The AHRI model of excellence is also the HR certification standard.

The members of the NCC come from a broad range of representative stakeholder groups that are capable of overseeing the key areas of academic knowledge and the application of practical skills that in their judgement amount to evidence of professional competence.
